Peace For Mexico

We judge that the latest upbeaval in Mexico, which deposes Madero, will assure peace and order to that much afflicted country, although curious to relate Zapata, who has been fighting against Madero, now declares for Madero and against the latest established government. We presume, however, that the new regime will find but little difficulty in disposing of Zapata.

Madero was in sore straits when Felix Diaz revolted and captured the arsenal in Mexico City. Madero did not have force enough immediately about him to put down the Diaz revolt. There was force enough available in Mexico, of the regular troops of the government, but Madero was in this dilemma. He did not have forces enough loyal to himself immediately available to put down Disz. He could call upon the rederal troops outside of the city to come to his relief, but if did so he ran the risk of having the leader of those troops turn upon him and oust him from the presidency. This latter of the two dilemmas is precisely what occurred, and President Madero undoubtedly knew the risk that he was assuming when he called General Huerta and General Blanquet to his aid. Blanquet commanded the forces nearest at hand, and although his force was comparatively small it was the deciding factor in the conflict. In turning against Madero, Blanquet to all intents and purposes sided with Diaz, as the first report indicated that he would do. Madero, however, evidently relied upon the loyalty of Blanquet and called on him to help. That call was fatal,

Madero was not of the stuff that Mexican rulers are made. He was merciful, and did not shoot Diaz when Diaz made his flasco at Vera Cruz and was captured. Madero must now see that that was a fatal error. Diaz himself would not have committed such an offense against Mexican precedent and Mexican custom. If Madero had followed the usual rule and had Diaz shot at sunrise the morning after his capture, it is probable that the revolt which Diaz headed would have been made hope-

It is evident also on other accounts that Madero was not the man for ruler of Mexico. He lacked the unbending rigor, the stern, implacable qualities that made the elder Diaz for so many years the idol of the Mexican people, or at least, if not the idol, he contrived to make them respect him as though he were, and to keep the peace within the boundaries of his rule.

It is evident that the crisis in Mexican affairs came none too soon, either for Mexico or for the United States. The united demands of leading European powers that the Unitel States should either enforce peace in Mexico or allow other nations to do it, thus abandoning its semiprotectorate which is involved in the Monroe doctrine, is a startling reminder of the responsibilities which the upholding of the Monroe doctrine imposes upon this country. From the European viewpoint, it is altogether reasonable that the United States should either be responsible for the turbulent Latin republics of Central and South America or else abandon the claim of right to exclude interposition of European powers. The plain lesson is that we must either assume the responsibility of the Monroe doctrine or modify it. But since the American people are not in the least likely to abate the Monroe doctrine, and since they are perfectly able to assume the responsibility of it from whatever standpoint that responsibility may be viewed, it is likely that a readjustment and a more explicit determination of precisely what the Monroe doctrine means must be arrived at and declared.

Washington's birthday is being observed in every city and hamlet in the United States today. In many of the larger cities appropriate exercises are being held to commemorate the natal day of the "father of our country," but in Tonopah the fact would pass by unnoticed. The local banking institutions have closed, owing to the date being a legal holiday, and the district court likewise is not in session.

Nye county now boasts of the largest marble quarry in the west, in addition to containing the largest silver producing camp in the world. Nothing is being said about this county leading the state in the matter of quicksliver production during the last year nor of the increased gold output. Verily, Nye is yet to witness the height of its fame and pros-

Mexico instead of exiling Madero should fit out an expedition and send him to Africa to shoot lions. Unlike the United States, the neighboring republic should see to it that the former president spends the rest of his life hunting big game instead of tiring the general public with narratives of exciting experiences.
